

San Jamar Launches Infrared Thermometers as U.S. Businesses Race to Meet Reopening Guidelines

ELKHORN, Wis., - June 4, 2020 – San Jamar, a CFS Brands company, launched non-contact infrared human forehead thermometers to help businesses meet federal, state, and local guidelines for the safe reopening of businesses.

The non-contact infrared thermometer is designed for measuring body temperature, specifically for use on the forehead area. The device collects heat radiation emitting from the forehead and quickly emits a sound after each temperature is taken. Requiring no skin contact, it is a more hygienic alternative to oral thermometers.

The device is FDA, CE, and ISO 13485 certified with a one-second response time at a testing range of 1-3 inches (3-5 centimeters) from the forehead. It features 3-color backlight for easy detection of low, normal, and high range of temperatures.

“U.S. workers yearn for the opportunity to return to their jobs – safely. We take pride in providing innovative products to our customers, and when they needed a way to ensure patron and employee safety, we jumped at the opportunity to help,” said Anthony Kehoe, VP of Global Innovation, CFS Brands.

Katie Babcock, CFS Brands Director of Product Development, added, “Our Escali brand of thermometers are respected for precision measurement in the foodservice industry. We are pleased to deliver the same level of accuracy with the non-contact human forehead thermometers.”
